NEW AT THE FIGGE

WENDY RED STAR
It has been an honor to serve as executive director of the Figge Art Museum for the past seven years. I want to thank everyone who welcomed me so warmly when I arrived, and who supported me in so many ways during my time in Davenport.

Thanks to the hard work and enthusiasm of many people—board members, staff members, docents, volunteers and everyone else—we have accomplished a great deal. Our numbers of visitors, members and participants in our programs have grown by leaps and bounds. We have presented scores of exhibitions, from the homegrown to the world-class, and we have acquired important new works for the collection. The museum is in a sound financial position, with the construction debt all but eliminated and a new contract in place with the City of Davenport.

Perhaps most importantly, we hear on a regular basis that people now feel that the Figge is their museum, a place that belongs to the community and supports the community. I look forward to visiting often and to seeing, as a visitor, the next stage of the museum’s growth.

And we have had fun! I will always remember Thursday nights—especially Pecha Kucha nights, and the Art at Heart Gala, especially the Wizard of Oz year, with its multiple Dorothys, witches and lions. We have presented exhibitions that have changed people’s perceptions of what art can be in the Quad Cities—Portrait of Maquoketa, The Art of Architecture: LEGO Sculptures, Katja Loher’s Videoplanet Orchestra, Self-Taught Genius: Treasures from the American Folk Art Museum, and of course French Moderns: Monet to Matisse, 1850–1950, to name just a few.

We have been privileged to hear from some of the most innovative and thoughtful artists and art historians in the country, who have in turn been impressed by our beautiful museum and by the thoughtful audiences, including students from the Creative Arts Academy and local colleges, whom they have met here.

When I visited the Figge for the first time in May 2012, I was awed by the building itself—the exterior was bigger and shinier than in pictures, and the artworks seemed to glow in the galleries. I still am taken aback by the beauty of the building, by the grand staircase and the soaring galleries. But my “take away” from my time at the Figge will be the experience of seeing people—of all ages and walks of life—engaging with art and with others inside this big glass box—and loving it. This is what the Figge is all about. Thank you!

Tim Schiffer

DIRECTOR’S CORNER
The Figge Art Museum is pleased to announce the acquisition of an important work by the critically acclaimed Native American artist Wendy Red Star.

Since her 2015 Figge exhibition Peelatchiwaaxpaash/Medicine Crow (Raven) and the 1880 Peace Delegation, Red Star’s works have been the subject of countless exhibitions, art reviews and symposia. This past spring, the Newark Museum featured her work in a mid-career retrospective, Wendy Red Star: A Scratch on the Earth. More recently, her work was included in the seminal Minneapolis Institute of the Arts exhibition of Native women artists, Hearts of Our People.

The indigenous roots of feminism, the importance of family, Crow tradition and mythology are central to Red Star’s artistic practice. Through works like Apsaalooke Feminist #4, 2016 (on cover), Red Star returns agency to thousands of years of Native visual culture long marginalized by European preferences. The work places Red Star and her daughter, artist Beatrice Red Star Fletcher, at the center of matrilineal tradition: they are adorned in hand-sewn ceremonial elk teeth dresses, scarves and beaded items, made by mother for daughter, grandmother for granddaughter. The textiles and clothing, rich with meticulous beadwork and embroidery, proclaim and restore the visual language of Crow history and identity.

Next summer, Red Star’s photographic series, My Home is Where my Tipi Sits, 2006, will be featured in the Figge exhibition Magnetic West. The exhibition, a collaboration with the University of Iowa Stanley Museum of Art, will explore the enduring allure of the American West in photography and how established mythologies are now giving way to a more practical view of the West as a place of dynamic interaction, rapid change and the locus of creative possibility.

The Rock Island Art Guild is pleased to announce the call for entries for the 41st Fine Arts Exhibition at the Figge Art Museum is now open! Candace Moeller, independent curator and associate director of Cristin Tierney Gallery, New York, N.Y., will be the juror. Any artist living within 150 miles of the Quad Cities is eligible to submit artworks for consideration.

Juried Art Services is now accepting submissions. This year, for the first time, the Rock Island Art Guild will accept submissions of video art and sound works. Visit the Rock Island Art Guild website (www.rockislandartguild.org) for the submission link and for more information about the exhibition.

Applications close on November 23, 2019. Artists will be notified the first week of January 2020.

41ST ROCK ISLAND ART GUILD FINE ARTS EXHIBITION JANUARY 18-APRIL 19, 2020

www.figgeartmuseum.org
Featuring works created during the past 10 years, Arterial Resources represents John Dilg’s ongoing search for visual forms that best distill a life of memory and experience. His small, devotional landscapes, which critic Roberta Smith has described as “cartoon-visionary,” explore a lifelong interest in the living-breathing aspects of the natural environment.

The exhibition takes its name from the eponymous painting of a verdant mound, bubbling with streams of life-giving water and, by implication, the fragility of life should earth’s arteries run dry.

The exhibition includes approximately 30 works as well as a collection of source materials—including thrift store artworks—which combined with his memory have inspired Dilg in the development of his work. Dilg is professor emeritus of the University of Iowa School of Art and Art History. His work has been featured in numerous solo and group exhibitions in the United States and Europe. He is currently represented by Taymour Grahne Gallery, London, where his most recent work will be featured in an exhibition in January 2020.

“In concert with their titles, these works both recollect and recompose important memories that, though personal in premise, could be applicable to anyone.”

JOHN DILG

Steve Erickson: Painter

SEPTEMBER 14, 2019-JANUARY 5, 2020 • THOMAS AND MARY GILDEHAUS GALLERY

“The main thing wrong with painting is that it is a rectangular plane placed flat against the wall. A rectangle is a shape itself; it is obviously the whole shape; it determines and limits the arrangement of whatever is on or inside of it.”

DONALD JUDD • ARTS YEARBOOK, 8, NEW YORK, 1965

Depending on who you asked in the 1960s and early 1970s, the art of painting was either washed up or waiting for a close-up. Painting’s only limiting factor then was the imagination of the artist, or an artist/critic-like sculptor Donald Judd, for whom painting in the traditional sense had become a dead end. On the other hand, with painting dead, the sky is/was the limit and painting could be whatever an artist wanted it to be.

Through the series of 11 recent works that comprise Steve Erickson: Painter, one can witness firsthand the artist’s desire to create paintings that suggest vast possibilities well beyond the edge of a rectangular plane. At once mysterious and familiar, Erickson’s work will provide Figge visitors an opportunity to appreciate the possibilities of painting in the 21st century.
Petroleum has become essential to our existence, from the packaging of the food we eat to our daily commute. For better or worse, these products have transformed not only our lives but also the landscape in which we live. Mia Feuer’s exhibition, Totems of the Anthropocene, envisions what our environment might become after prolonged exposure to petroleum.

Feuer’s interest in petroleum has taken her around the globe. Her experiences have deepened her understanding of the consequences of mining petroleum, from not only an environmental perspective, but also a social and political one. Feuer’s challenging sculptures question our exploitation of our environment. In spite of this, Feuer’s own work is created out of materials that result from this exploitation, including polyurethane foam, resins and adhesive, which are all petroleum by-products. Through her use of these materials, the works in this exhibition demonstrate their inescapability.

Visitors to the exhibition will encounter this reality in the form of several site-specific installations, including a synthetic ice rink on which one visitor at a time may skate under a swirling vortex of ravens and uprooted trees. The rink, ravens and trees reference the environmental realities of the Alberta tar sands in Feuer’s native Canada. The bizarre landscape of the tar sands is the result of an effort to revive the landscape after surface mining for oil. This dystopian environment became the inspiration for several of Feuer’s installations, including her synthetic ice rink.

Synthetic ice rinks are becoming more prevalent in Canada as the ponds on which many Canadians learned to skate remain unfrozen as global temperatures continue to rise. The sensation of skating in the unnatural desolate scenery that Feuer creates hints at an unpleasant future we may all face.

This exhibition is presented in partnership with the Center for Polar Studies at Augustana College and Davenport Parks and Recreation.
Portrait of Maquoketa and The Storytelling Tree

OCTOBER 19, 2019—FEBRUARY 2, 2020 • THIRD FLOOR GALLERY

“As she slept, her story was passed from branch to branch, to root from root.”

CHUCK MORRIS • THE STORYTELLING TREE, 2019

A Quad-City favorite returns to the Figge this fall. Rose Frantzen’s renowned Portrait of Maquoketa will be on view in the Figge’s third-floor gallery. For this showing, Frantzen’s installation will be joined by a wonderful suite of illustrations for a new children’s book by artist and Rose’s partner, Chuck Morris.

Just as Portrait of Maquoketa reminds us of the importance of connecting family with community, The Storytelling Tree tells the story of a young girl’s special bond with her father, the owner of a small bookstore and writer of magical stories, through the power of words. Through his enchanting story and playfully surreal imagery, Morris reminds us of the boundless worlds we can experience through reading.

A special limited-run, first edition of The Storytelling Tree will be available through the Figge’s Museum Store.

Henry Dreyfuss: Designs for the Modern Age

UPCOMING EXHIBITION  FEBRUARY 22–MAY 24, 2020 • THIRD FLOOR GALLERY

This exhibition will feature the work of influential industrial designer Henry Dreyfuss. From the 1930s through the 1960s, Dreyfuss and his firm designed iconic objects including the styled John Deere tractor, the 20th Century Limited passenger train and the Western Electric model 500 telephone for Bell. Original sketches, design proposals and objects on loan from the John Deere Archives, the Cooper Hewitt Smithsonian Design Museum, the Albany Institute of History and Art, and the AT&T Archives and History Center will be on display.

Energize the learning process and give your students an experience in the arts by scheduling a study trip to the Figge! Elementary through high school students can experience a guided tour with our trained docents. These tailored sessions encourage great conversations about art as students are invited to look closely, question and wonder in the museum galleries. Other spaces in the museum also can be a part of your visit. The education department has a variety of art films to share in the John Deere Auditorium, or play sessions can be scheduled in the Family Activity Center.

Study Trips $3 per student. There is no charge for staff or chaperones. If cost is an inhibiting factor for your school, please inquire about our Yellow School Bus Fund. We are happy to work with all groups that would like to visit! For inquiries and information, please contact Heather Aaronson at 563.345.6630 or haaronson@figgeartmuseum.org.

Look & Do $5 per student. Study trips can be enhanced by artmaking sessions with a museum educator in the studios. Students will create a take-home art project that is inspired by their gallery visit. Students first look, then do!

Big Picture Outreach Program Figge outreach educators make free K-12 classroom visits, connecting students with art to teach “big picture” ideas from a visual perspective. For more information, visit www.figgeartmuseum.org or contact Laura Wriedt at lwnedt@figgeartmuseum.org or 563.345.6641.

THANK YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT

Lillian's story

“The meaning of life is to find your gift. The purpose of life is to give it away.” PABLO PICASSO

As kids we all remember the exhilaration of ripping the paper off a gift, sending it flying, with anticipation of what’s inside and the hope that it wasn’t a pink nightmare bunny outfit.

As time goes by, receiving a gift is still nice, but it becomes more thrilling to watch others delight in a gift given to them. Observing the happiness from the surprise of receiving something personal and meaningful to them, knowing someone cared, is significant.

The same holds true for whether giving a gift, donating to a charity, helping someone in need or volunteering. The result of giving is powerful, refreshing and personal.

Eleanor Roosevelt said, “Since you get more joy out of giving joy to others, you should put a good deal of thought into the happiness that you are able to give.”

In achieving this joy, we all give for different reasons and by different means. Lillian L. Brand through her estate plan created a foundation to achieve her joy.

Lillian was a native of Davenport, like her mother. Her father was a jeweler originally from Milwaukee. Her parents had three girls prior to Lillian’s father passing away when she was young. This left her mother and grandparents to raise the girls. Growing up, they lived near downtown as Lillian's grandfather owned several businesses in the area, one being a livery stable on the site of the Figge Art Museum.

Only one of the girls married and she eventually had a son, William Brand Boeshaar. William passed away unexpectedly while studying art at St. Ambrose. The family was heartbroken by the passing of young William.

Lillian worked as an order taker at the Dewey Portland Cement Company, then located in the Kahl Building. During the 1930s and 1940s, she took orders for Mississippi River Lock and Dam construction.

Later in life, Lillian and her sisters sold their family home and purchased a brick house south of Locust Street near Duck Creek Park.

Lillian, who grew up during the Depression, was known for having a Depression-era mentality. Nothing was wasted; nothing was purchased unless you paid cash, and it was an absolute necessity. Money was not for spending but for saving, as you never knew what the future would bring.

Over the years, even after the Depression, Lillian saved and invested. She eventually found herself to be a millionaire after inheriting from her mother and sisters, then a double millionaire.

Lillian’s estate attorney, David Dettmann at Lane & Waterman, remembers her fondly as wearing a coat that had so many holes in the lining she struggled to put it on. A suggestion of purchasing a new coat—which she could afford—would quickly be dismissed by the sweet reply of, “no need to buy a new one—this is good enough to keep me warm and dry.”

Lillian was the last to pass away in her family; however, she ensured her family legacy would never be forgotten. In partnership with her attorney, she created and funded the Brand Boeshaar Foundation through her estate.

Many years after Lillian’s passing, the Brand Boeshaar Foundation still remains strong. Committed to supporting arts, which was a passion for the family, the Foundation awards four art education scholarships totaling $12,000 each year; each scholarship is named after one of Lillian L. Brand’s family members.

The Foundation also has generously supported the Figge Art Museum’s educational programs through the years, nearing total contributions of almost $500,000. The Brand Boeshaar family name is visible on the studios at the Figge for all who pass through, paying homage to the Brand Boeshaar legacy of support, generosity and love of art.

Creating the Foundation had special meaning and importance to Lillian, and it fit her financial objectives and Depression-era mentality. She was able to feel confident that upon her passing, the impact and legacy she desired would be fulfilled.

As I reflect on Lillian’s story and those of others who have generously supported the Figge, I am genuinely grateful. Grateful that almost every inch of this magnificent place is here because of someone’s personal interest and desire to experience the joy that is created when one opens the gift of the Figge Art Museum and is delighted by all it has to offer inside.

For those of us who have already received the Figge gift, we are all so very thankful. And for those who haven’t, please visit and enjoy the surprise.

Sara Volz, Development Director
Interested in supporting the Figge?

Are you interested in supporting the Figge Art Museum, but aren’t sure what is the best way? There are many options to support a charitable organization you are passionate about besides writing a check.

Below are a few options to consider. When making a charitable gift, please consult with your estate attorney, accountant or financial advisor to determine the best way for you to give to maximize your impact and tax deduction. It’s important to partner with a charitable organization to assist you through the gift process to ensure you make the impact you desire and are recognized appropriately.

IRA Charitable Rollover Those who have a traditional IRA by retirement need to start collecting distributions when they reach 70½. The amount of these distributions varies, depending on your age and value of your account. One potential way to avoid all or some of those taxes is by donating your required distribution to an eligible charity. You may give a gift directly from your IRA to a qualified charity and receive a tax benefit. Partner with your financial advisor and charitable organization to learn more.

Will or Living Trust It’s important to plan and provide for the future financial security of your family and others by creating a will or living trust. It can also be a way to make thoughtful charitable gifts to an organization that you are passionate about. It’s a good feeling to know that a portion of your property will continue to provide support to your favorite charity and potentially create a legacy.

If the donation is subject to estate taxes, a charitable deduction may be allowed against those taxes, with a contribution. Many times, including a charitable contribution can be made by a simple codicil to the will, which would not require rewriting the entire document.

Life Insurance Life insurance is another way to make a substantial future gift. You may name the Figge as a beneficiary to receive the proceeds of an existing life or new insurance policy. You may be eligible to receive a tax deduction for approximately the cash surrender value.

You could retain the incidents of ownership over the policy, including the right to change the beneficiaries.

Securities Gifts of appreciated stock may also be an effective and thoughtful way to support your favorite charity. Charitable gifts made of long-term appreciated stock (usually held more than one year), could potentially avoid capital gain taxes. Their full market value may also be a deduction as a charitable contribution from income taxes.

Real Estate Giving a gift of long-term appreciated real estate may be an option to consider, as you may be eligible for additional tax benefits. You may qualify for a federal income tax deduction equal to fair market value of your property, as well as avoid potential capital gains tax.

Another option is a retained life estate. This option may enable you to transfer a gift of real estate and reap a tax benefit, while continuing to live on the property. You remain responsible for maintenance, taxes, insurance, etc., and the charitable organization named would only take possession of the property after your passing. If the gift cannot be revoked, you may qualify for a federal income tax deduction for a portion of your home’s value.

Remember: all giving is personal. Please work directly with your charitable organization, attorney, accountant and financial advisor to identify the most up-to-date tax laws and options for your situation.

ART AT HEART GALA:
Finding Beauty

Hundreds of guests enjoyed the Art at Heart Gala on June 1 to celebrate and support arts education and outreach programs in the Quad-Cities region.

Inspired by the Vanessa German and Vik Muniz exhibitions, volunteers decorated the museum with found, salvaged and natural objects.

Gala guests enjoyed a short film featuring area students and teachers talking about how art impacts their life. Will Browne, a Creative Arts Academy student, gave a fun and heart-felt speech about the importance of the Figge in his life and why art matters in our community. A lively auction concluded the evening.

Figge to receive city funding beyond 2023

On June 3, 2019, Davenport Mayor Frank Klipsch, Figge President Cindy Carlson and Quad Cities Cultural Trust Board Chairman Steve Bahls signed a contract extending city funding for the Figge beyond 2023, when the prior contract was scheduled to expire.

The Figge will continue to house, care for and exhibit the city’s art collection, which began with Charles A. Ficke’s gift of 330 works of art in 1925, on the condition that the city open and maintain a public art gallery.

Originally housed in a former armory building on 5th Street, the Municipal Art Gallery moved to Division Street, adjacent to the Putnam Museum, in the 1960s, and was renamed the Davenport Museum of Art. By the 1990s the collection had grown to nearly 4,000 works and needed a new, larger home.

Museum leaders decided to move the museum to a site downtown as part of a larger revitalization effort that was funded by a major grant from the State of Iowa. To raise additional funds for construction, the museum became a nonprofit organization, with an agreement in place for the city to provide funding for 20 years.

The new agreement extends the city’s commitment into the future, ensuring the proper care of the collection and the continued community benefit of the museum. As part of the agreement, the Quad Cities Cultural Trust will continue its support of the Figge, one of six cultural entities that receives ongoing funding.

Noted paid contributions were received as of July 15, 2018 through July 15, 2019.
The surgeons at ORA Orthopedics specialize in outpatient total joint replacement surgery. As the largest and most advanced provider of orthopedic care in the Quad Cities, our fellowship-trained, board-certified physicians are redefining the experience for patients who need total joint replacement.

With new advances in surgical techniques and personalized care focused exclusively on you, you can now walk out of the surgical center the very same day and recover in the comfort of your own home. Learn more at qcora.com.
